Two persons were injured, one a woman quite seriously, early Thursday morning when their automobile turned over while negotiating a turn on the La Honda grade. The driver of the car, Charles Smith, was booked at the jail here and is being held for investigation pending the outcome of the accident.

The woman, who was a passenger in the car(was taken to the Redwood City hospital, where her condition is said to be quite serious. In the event of her death, a charge of manslaughter will be placed against the driver of the car.

The report of the accident was sent into the sheriff's office at 4 o'clock yesterday morning, almost simultaneously by W. B. Bursett and H. Fry. The case was immediately investigated and officers reported that the machine had been traveling at a high rate of speed and had not been able to stay on the road.

NEW PLANT TO LOCATE ON MARSH NEAR TOWN

The number of Redwood City's industrial plants will be augmented shortly when the Monterey Bubblestone Co. will build a plant on land belonging to the Redwood Harbor Company adjoining the Pacific Portland Cement Company's plant. The new factory will produce a patented building material which finds many uses in house construction. This will be the second plant of this concern. The other is now in successful operation near Santa Barbara. The plant at that point is constructed of the material which the company manufactures and it stood the shock of the recent earthquake without cracking.

The Monterey Bubblestone Co. has joined the Redwood City Chember of Commerce, and its manager, Thomas J. Hampton, will address the meeting of that body on Monday and explain the uses of his product. The plant will be a large user of cement from the cement plant here.

DEATH TAKES OLD TIME RESIDENT OF HALF MOON BAY

John E. Mullen, who passed away in San Francisco last Monday following a brief illness, was well know in Halfmoon Bay, where he spent his boyhood and where members of his family have resided since the sixties. Mullen was appointed an inspector of customs by the late Timothy Guy Phelps, when he was collector of port of San Francisco in 1890. Mullen served 37 years in the government service, always as an inspector. He was efficient and a capable officer, well liked and loved by his associates.

The Mullen family is one of the pioneer families of the coast side. John Mullen, father of the deceased, is still living and is in his ninetieth year. For a long time the family has resided in the city. John Mullen, Sr. was prominent in the affairs of the county forty years ago. He was elected justice of the peace of Halfmoon Bay in 1878 and was chosen supervisor in 1884, serving one term of four years. Mr. Mullen was a deputy assessor under the late P. J. Maloney. He aspired to be assessor but was beaten in the convention.

The Mullen ranch at Halfmoon Bay was sold many years ago, but Mr. Mullen retained five acres consisting of the home, where the family spent their summers.

Besides his father, the deceased is survived by two brothers, Joseph and Hugh Mullen, and two sisters, Minnie and Clara Mullen. Another sister, Anne, was in Japan during the earthquake there a few years ago in the employe of the General Electric Company. She escaped injury but on her way home died on the ship as the result of the excitment and shock of the great disaster. She had been in the Orient for a number of years.

The Mullen sisters were all pretty and beautiful and in their day were the belles of the coast-side.

NATIVE SON MINSTREL IS BIG SUCCESS

Characterized as one of the best shows ever produced by local talent, the ministrel show of Redwood Parlor N. S. G. W. No. 66 last Friday night was a complete success, both from the point of view of the audience and from the receipts. The show was staged in the auditorium of the high school and the large building was filled with a large and enthusiastic audience.

The chorus consisted of E. Coats, A. P. Sahlberg, J. Phinney, A. Deluchi, F. Sericano, Geo. MacDonald, Phil Kreiss, W. Meyers, Geo. Solari, Wm. Curtis, Louis Lodi, H. Day, C. Hallet, A. McKay, Phil Bozzo, . O'Neil and H. Mallory. They were accompanied on the piano by Kendel Towne.

PLANS ARE IN HANDS OF MISS ABBOTT

The plans for the new school which is to be erected on James street were completed this week and have been acrepted by the board of trustees. The plans are now in the hands of Miss Pansy Jewett Abbott, county superinent of schools, and will be approved by her within the next few days. The trustees of the local district expect to advertise for bids for the construction of the new building next week.

The plans as accepted by the board of trustees provided for a building which will accomodate both an elementary school and the present intermediate school. The school now used as an intermediate school will then be converted into an elementary school for the children in the eastern side of town.

The property of the Central school has been sold and the building must be removed by the first of the year. It is therefore, the plan of the trustees to rush work on the new structure.

The building is being renovated at present for the new tenants, and equipment is being installed this week. The new store will carry a full line of nationally advertised goods and will sell, it is claimed, at very reduced prices. A definite date will be announced next week.

PHELPS PROPERTY HERE PURCHASED BY WHITING

S. E. Whiting and Company yesterday purchased the entire holdings of the Phelps estate in Redwood City, consisting of 66 lots in the Eastern Addition. The sum of $40,000 was paid for the property. This land was bought by the late Timothy Guy Phelps in the sixties and while he was congressman from this district. Phelps street was named after the lawmaker. Phelps in his time was one of the most prominent men in California. He was twice collector of the port of San Francisco and at one time aspired to be United States senator, but was defeated by George Gorham. Mr. Phelps served in both houses of the state legislature and was harbor commissioner for several terms.

The property was purchased by Whiting will be improved and placed on the market at once In as much as the Bayshore road will be located not far from the land, it is certain to become valuable.

PRATT LOW CANNERY TO DOUBLE OUTPUT

Under the direction of Joe Gibson, manager of the local plant of the Pratt Low Preserving Company, that company is installing machinery that will practically double their capacity of peaches. A new train of washers and kindred machinery has been installed in the new section built last year. Included in the new equipment are two capping machines having a capacity of 75 cans a minute. This machinery is being installed in expectation of a busy year during the peach season this year. The added equipment will require the services of twenty-five more canners for its operation.

During this season when the cannery is shut down the whole plant is being renovated under the direction of the manager. All machinery is torn down and repaired, painted, oiled and put into shape for the long and continuous service which it must give during the short time in which canning must be done. The grounds are also being beautified by the planting of ornamental and shade trees and of beds of flowers.

The plant is to be opened for work early in June when the apricots will be ready. These will be followed in rapid succession by peaches and pears.

The plant will then employ 750 persons beside the office force. Of these 600 are women and 150 are men. The weekly pay roll of the local plant during the season amounts to $15,000, most of which goes to local people and to the merchants of this city. For this reason the cannery is an important factor in the community. It is also one of the heaviest consumers of water in this city, its daily consumption being about 100,000 gallons. It also is one of the largest users of electricity in the city, with the exception of the cement works, in this section.

The equipment of the Pratt-Low Company's Redwood City branch is one of the most complete of any on the coast. From start to finish every process is carried on mechanically with a minimum of handling. Large and expensive machines with seemingly human intelligence and more than human endurance are busy from daylight to dark filling cans, adding syrup, cooking the fruit and sealing the cans.

The product is directly supervised from start to finish, and is constantly under the care of trained operators, who grade and sort the fruit into six different classes according to ripness and quality. Fruit form the local cannery has made a world-wide reputation and hundreds of cases were shipped from here last year to supply the demand in England and Europe.

No detail is overlooked by the manager of the local plant, Joe Gibson, which will increase the safety and comfort of the employees. An emergency hospital with a trained nurse is maintained at the plant.

WEEVIL HAS BEEN FOUND IN COUNTY

San Mateo County truck gardeners face the contingency of having their products quarantined by the State Horticulaural Commission, according to A. W. Tate, county horticultural commissioner. An infestation of the Australian tomato weevil has been found in this and in Santa Clara and Solano counties, and unless means are found to exterminate the pest, vegetable products from these counties will not be allowed to be shipped outside of the quarantined area.

A conference will be held May 3, 1927, at 10:00 a. m. at Room 8, Ferry building, San Francisco, by the Director of Agriculture to consider the advisability of placing restrictive measures to prevent the distribution in this state of the so-called Australian tomato weevil (Listroderes obliquus) .

The movement of produce into the San Francisco markets both for consumption and for further distribution is involved as well as the movement of this type of truck crop vegetables to canneries.

This insect has been found seriously attacking turnips, carrots, spinach, lettuce, tomato plants, cabbage and other truck crops and is readily carried on such vegetables. Consideration will be given at this conference, therefore, to regulations prohibiting the movement from infested areas to other portions of this state of the above named hosts and any other vegetables, plants, plant products or other possible carriers of that insect.

All persons interested in such proposed regulations should attend this conference in order that a complete discussion of the subject can be had.

If put into effect the proposed quarantine would affect an acreage in this county of 4540 acres, distributed among the various crops as follows: cauliflower, 1110 acres; cabbage, 1040 acres; tomatoes, 820 acres; brussel sprouts 760 acres; lettuce, 537 acres; carrots, 75 acres; spinach, 56 acres; celery, 54 acres; turnips, 51 acres; table beets, 45 acres. The loss of these crops would cause an enormous loss to the growers.

Commissioner Tate and an inspector from the state department made an inspection of conditions in the county yesterday . It is hoped by Tate that in making the quarantine district that he may be able to have the northern part of the county excluded. This is the section most devoted to truck gardening, and Tate stated this week that he did not believe that this section was affected with the weevil. The greatest infestation was in the southern and southeastern part of the county.

Writ of Mandate Refused By Buck

Judge Buck on Wednesday rendered a decision in the case of Frederick Peterson plaintiff and petitioner against the board of supervisors of San Mateo county, state of California, et al. The court denies the petition, thus failing to grant the alternate writ of mandamus asked for by the petitioner. The decision is as follows:

"A petitione was filed in this court on April 21, 1927, for a writ of madate to compel the board of supervisors of this county to redistrict this county into five supervisor districts "as nearly equal in population as may be" and setting forth facts which show that the supervisor districts of less than one thousand votes have as much weight in the business afairs of the county as those containing many thousand of votes. From the petition it seems as though some action should be taken by the board of supervisors to remedy this matter. But in the first place the petition now before the court is not suficient in form to properly present the matter to the court. In the second place almost an exact copy of the petition now before me was presented to the higher court in this matter some months ago and was by that court denied. I would suggest the board of supervisors fail to act in this matter that a proper petition be drawn and presented to the higher court and get a ruling from that court. For the reasons stated the petition is denied without prejudice.

BUCK,
Judge.

Police have received many complaints from people in the neighborhood. A cat owned by Mrs. Stanley Elliott has just been released from care of the veterinarian, following a terrific struggle with the stalker, in which her cat barely escaped with one of its nine lives. Two kittens and their mother have fallen prey to the feline marauder. The cat has a peculiar howl, described as a "fiendish yowl," that distinguishes it from all other cats in the vicinity.

Riverside has maintained its normal growth during the last twelve months with only degrees of progress to distinguish one year from another in the steady climb as a municipality of residential and industrial importance. Dwellings, schools, municipal buildings, bank clearings, industrial development—all have kept pace with Southern California's general prosperity. Known for its Mission Inn, its Mount Rubidoux, Magnolia avenue and as a city of trees, Riverside has many other accomplishments. Its building program during the last few months has been exceptional. Large sums are being spent on parks. Victoria avenue bridge calls for an expenditure of $100,000; school program more than $1,000,000; municipal auditorium, now under construction, $250,000, and $200,000 monthly is being put into houses for homeseekers.

J. R. Hall, head of the Sonora forest service, has received a statement of the allotment to the Stanislaus National Forest from the national government for road and trail maintenance for 1927. The appropriations total $12,700, most of which will be applied in Tuolumne county for improvements. The forest was allotted $2,700 for forest trails and $3,500 for the construction of a new road on Soapstone Ridge, in the region below Bowers Cave, Mariposa county. The road will be about three miles long and is being built primarily for fire protection. It is to be constructed on the brink of the Merced River overlooking the deep canyon. The federal government also gave $6,500 for roads throughout the forest.

A new building for the Bank of Italy on the site of the present structure at Merced will be started within two weeks, according to plans developed after a series of conferences. Alternate plans are under consideration, one for a one-story monumental bank building and the other for a combination bank and office building. It is expected that the type of building to be constructed will be decided shortly, as the result of a survey now going on among business men and professional men. The branch of the Bank of Italy and the Security Savings branch of the Bank of Italy will be combined in the latter's quarters during the construction, and both will occupy the building as one branch.

The bursting of the 150-foot vertical penstock at the Vahrencamp gravel mine, a short distance from Grass Valley on Deer creek, caused damage to the extent of $2,000 and imperiled the lives of workers. According to F. H. Vahrencamp, the manager, an obstruction was placed in the upper end of the tube at the time it was carrying a big head of water. Whether the act was done maliciously or thoughtlessly has not been ascertained. The penstock is used for power purposes in connection with a gravel mining project, and the accident caused the flooding of the workings and the elevating plant and processes installed there.

A year of great activity in the forests and mills of Lassen county is anticipated by lumbermen as the season of 1927 gets steadily under way. All the large lumber mills in the Susanville and the Westwood district will be in operation before the end of this month. The Red Wood Lumber company expects to employ more than 4,000 men throughout the summer. It is equipping its seventeen miles of railroad into its lumber holdings with electric motors to replace the steam power hitherto used.

Six large metal signs advertising Sanger with the words Welcome To Sanger across the top, will be erected at the main approaches to the city by the Sanger Chamber of Commerce, Kiwanis and Lions' Club. The estimated cost of the novel means of advertising Sanger will amount to approximately $350, the major portion of which will be borne by the chamber of commerce.

Downey recently cut its new dial telephone system into service and now has quick communication with all other points by means of a direct dial system. To complete the cutover the construction of a new modern telephone building and the installation of machine switching central office equipment was necessary.

One of the largest mergers in Orange county banking history, involving combined resources aggregating more than $4,000,000 was revealed at Orange with official announcement of plans for consolidating the First National Bank and the National Bank of Orange, together with their affiliated saving institutions.

Easter week brought to the Monterey Peninsula more than ten thousand visitors, drawn from all parts of the United States, and in a few instances from Europe and the Orient, a check of local hotels and tourist agencies revealed.

Addition of an $18,000 project to the expansion budget of the Southern California Edison company at Fontana which already calls for the expenditure of more than $200,000, was announced by District Manager H. J. Moulton. The new work provides for the starting of construction on a branch substation.

Because of the lateness of the flower season at Lodi this year, it has been necessary to change the date of the flower show of the garden section of Lodi Woman's Club from April 21 to May 10. Other plans will remain the same.

TWO HOMES MADE HAPPY

By Women Who Used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I think it is the most wonderful medicine I ever tried," is the statement made by Mrs. Goldie Shoup of St. Joseph, Illinois. She declares that after taking the Compound she is in better health than before.

Mrs. J. Storms of 29 Lane Street, Paterson, N. J., writes: "I cannot speak too highly of your medicine and I recommend it to all my friends."

These statements were taken from two enthusiastic letters which tell of the help that has been received from using the Vegetable Compound. Both Mrs. Shoup and Mrs. Storms were in a run-down condition which caused them much unhappiness. When women are suffering from lack of strength and from weakness, their own life and that of their family is affected. When they feel well and strong and are able to do their housework easily, happy homes are the result.

Heroic Sleeping

Sir Norman Rae said:

"I like everything American except your sleeping porch. The American winter climate is a very cold one and to sleep out in the open with the thermometer at zero is a dangerous thing to do.

"'And you mean to say that you sleep on this sleeping porch all winter long?' I said to a frail-looking lady in a western city.

"'Yes, all winter long,' said she.

"'Isn't it frightfully cold?'

"'Cold?' said the lady with a shiver. 'Indeed it is cold. Why, when Doctor Gore took out my appendix last winter it was chapped.'"

110 Years of Friendship

ON both sides of the Canadian border this week celebrations were held in commemoration of the 110th anniversary of the signing of the Rush-Baget treaty and the friendly relations which have always characterized the affairs of the two nations. Separated by a boundary line more than three thousand miles long and without a single fort or military outpost, these two nations offer to the world an example of real national faith and cordiality. An example, however, which is seldom followed among the other nations of the world.

It is a strange twist of human nature that makes the peace and friendly relations of these two countries more to be wondered at than the fact that other countries are eternally and everlasingly at war. With everything that man can desire in the world, yet today even in this so-called enlightened age children are born, grow up and are shot without ever having seen a time of peace or stability in their nations.

For two nations to exist side by side with the friendly spirit of co-operation which extends across the United States-Canadian borderline is in this time a great and worthy achievement, and one well worthy of mention. However, we wish that it could be so common as to pass without notice, while the wonder would be reserved for the nations which through greed or mallice would plunge their citizens into war.

The man who makes his living by working is too busy to bother about territorial agression, and when he learns that this is as true in every country as in his own, and that those who foment wars are his enemies and not the foreign workman, peace will be universal and we shall not celebrate it.

Advertising Bring Telephone Success

AN interesting and convincing proof of the value of advertising and publicity is had in the success with which the telephone industry has used them. A fallacious argument, masked as conservative business judgment, used to be to the effect that "The telephone company should need no advertising for if anyone wants telephone service, he knows where it may be obtained."

As a matter of fact the telephone has, during the fifty-one years of its history, been popularized largely through consistent advertising in widely read newspapers and periodicals. The result has been that telephone service is used in the United States to a higher degree than in any other country of the world; and the American people have been given a reliable, efficient and universal telephone service. As one editor stated it: "People would not be using the telephone as they do today if the telephone idea had not been spread by means of advertising; and if valuable information had not been broadcast through publicity channels. The telephone company, with its effective advertising, has found beyond doubt, the value of newspaper and magazines in bringing the merits of products and services before the public."

RECEIVES MERITED PROMOTION IN CHURCH

Father James P. Moran, the beloved and devoted pastor of the South San Francisco Catholic church, for a great many years, has received a deserved and merited promotion in the appointment of pastor of St. Thomas's church, San Francisco. Father Moran is widely known throughout the county and his many friends wish him success in his new, wider and larger field of endeavor.

America maintains its world leadership in industrial affairs by constantly improving methods of manufacture and substituting machine power for man-power.

COWBOY PREACHER KILLED BY OFFICERS

John Roberts, an eccentric evangelist, who has been touring the country in a covered wagon drawn by donkeys and covered with bible inscriptions, was shot and killed Friday afternoon by deputies from the office of Sheriff McGovern. The "Cowboy Preacher," as he was called, because of his manner of dress, had been in San Mateo for several days and had alarmed residents of that town on occasions by flourishing a large red revolver.

When the demonstrations of the evangelist became too alarming the San Mateo police were sent for. Manuel Trenta, police officer of San Mateo, edeavored to put the 'wild' preacher out of town, but Roberts replied with two shots at the police car. He then drove to Beresford, where he unhitched his team.

After his experience with the preacher, Trenta called the sheriff's office. Deputies Joe Meeks, Harold Power, J. E. Farrell, C. A. Callaghan and Dr. H. Clattenburg hurried north to arrest Roberts.

At Beresford on the old highway the deputies found the evangelist unhitching his team. He got into his wagon when he saw them approaching. The posse called for Roberts to come out of the wagon, but instead he opened fire with the revolver. Several bullets went wild but two struck Callaghan, one striking him in the arm and following along the arm bone to a point above the elbow; the other entered the abdomen.

Power, Meeks and Farrell then opened fire and Roberts fell with two bullets through him. He passed away within a half hour at the Community hispital. In his wagon was found the revolver which had been painted a bright red, and a shot gun, also painted red. He had painted the shells of the revolver with red lead. On the inside of the wagon was pasted a warrant for the arrest of Roberts issued in Los Angeleh in 1923, on a charge of insanity. How he came into possession of this warrant for his own arrest is not known.

Roberts and Callaghan were hurried to the Community hospital under the care of Dr. Clattenburg. The former died shortly after arriving at the hospital, but Callaghan will recover.

Roberts had been in this city a few days before and was encamped for some time just south of Five Points. He wore a cowboy outfit and had a large red cross painted on his broadbrimmed hat. He was about 32 years of age.

An inquest was held on Saturday at which time it was found that two bullets had passed through Roberts, one entering a lung and the other passing his liver. The officers were exhonorated from any blame in the shooting as it was clearly shown that their action was in self defense. The man was shown to have been violently insane.

FIRST NEON GAS SIGN PUT INTO SERVICE HERE

The first neon gas sign to be erected in Redwood City was put into service this week by Reinhardt and Co., jewelers, of Broadway. The new type of sign is very effective and is being rapidly adopted in the large cities of the world, almost in fact superceding the incandescent bulb signs or stationary displays. The sign erected by Reinhardt this week offers a sharp contrast in color to any signs in the district and should prove very effective.

SPECULATES ON ART OF COMEDY

Stage Fun and Screen Fun Differ Widely, He Decides

"This business of being funny in pictures certainly has its drawbacks," says Eddie Cantor, former Broadway comedy star whose latest Paramount mirth-provoker, "Special Delivery," will be shown at Sequoia Theatre next Monday and Tuesday, May 2 and 3.

"When you're funny on the stage, you know what you're going to do, and you do it. It's all in what you say and how you say it.

"But being funny in pictures is altogether different. I know, I've tried it twice. You never know what you're going to have to do nor when you are going to do it.

"When Jesse L. Lasky asked me to do a screen version of 'Kid Boots" I said 'Fine.' 'When do we begin?' Ididn't know then that I'd have to fall over cliffs and drop from an airplane and chase a galloping horse over mountain roads with a rope between me and the horse. But that's what happened.

"And in 'Special Delivery' it is just as bad.

"Everything started out nice and easy. I'm a rookie postman delivering mail and special delivery letters. Of course I get into all kinds of complex situations.

"But when I have to start out and chase William Powell, who plays the villain, all over Los Angeles in order to save Jobyna Ralston, who is my sweetheart, and is in Powell's clutches, that's where the 'fun' begins. I thought 'Kid Boots' was bad enough. But this is worse. They cracked me up in a motorcycle going

DEMI-BRIDE IS SNAPPY COMEDY

Norma Shearer Delightful in This Farcical Tale; Cody has Male Lead

Snappy farce comedy, said to be one of the best motion pictures of the season, is coming to the Sequoia Theatre next Wednesday and Thursday, May 4-5. It is "The Demi-Bride," a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer feature, and Norma Shearer's latest starring vehicle. "The Demi-Bride" is the lovely Norma's first fling at farce. That she does it superbly is evidenced by the enthusiastic approval which is meeting the film throughout the country. The story concerns a young girl from a convent school who falls in love with the most dashing boulevardier of Paris. How she, with naive, unsophisticated ways, wins him away from her charming and wordly stepmother, and from the star of the Folies Bergere, not to mention other seductive ladies, affords one mirth-provoking surprise after another. Lew Cody plays opposite Miss Shearer. The story was especially written for these two players and it affords them ample opportunity to display their talents. Both appear at their best. Carmel Myers in the role of the stepmother, contribute of strinking performance.

AUTO SUPPLY COMPANY TO OPEN ON HIGHWAY

Preparations for the opening of Levin's Auto Supply Co. at the corner of Brewster street and the highway were being rushed this week by S. A. Lavine, local manager for the big concern. The opening date is not yet definitely fixed but will probably be early in May.

The Lavin Auto Supply Co. specializes in auto parts, accessories and camping equipment. It maintains stores in San Francisco, San Jose, Santa Cruz. The head office is in San Francisco. It is planned to have the local store open in the evenings and on Sundays in order to accommodate motorists at all times.

The manager, S. A. Lavine, and Mrs. Lavine are now making their home in this city.

FORMER PASTOR OF COASTSIDE DIES IN OAKLAND

The death of Father J. T. Egan, who passed away recently in Providence Hospital, Oakland, is mourned by thousands. His first charge after ordination over a quarter a century ago was assistant pastor of the Catholic church at Halfmoon Bay, where the young levite was loved or his piety and devotion to his holy calling.

Father Egan was born in Glenisland, Castlebar, County Mayo, Ireland, June 6, 1871. He was the oldest of the ten children of Mrs. Mary Ega and the late Thomas Egan. His mother, now 81 years old, his brothers, Michael J. and Bernard F., and his sisters, Sister Mary Berchmans of the Mercy order, Margaret and Alice Egan, survive him in Ireland. His brother, Patrick F. Egan, is a resident of Richmond, California. Sister Mary Clare of the Mercy Order and Brigid Gertrude and Josephine Teresa Egan predeceased him.

SECURING RIGHTS OF WAY FOR BAY SHORE HIGHWAY

The right of way man of the highway commission was here during the week securing rights of way for the bayshore road. Excepting a few small stretches at Runnymede and East Palo Alto, they have nearly all been secured by the commission. The bill for the three cent-tax is to be passed and signed by the governor this week so that funds will soon be available for the construction of the road on which work will commence this summer. The commission and the people of San Francisco and the peninsula are anxious to complete highway to relieve the vast congestion on the roads leading rom the city. Bids have been asked for by the commission to pave the stretch from South San Francisco to Burlingame and when this work is finished, immediate action is to be taken to build the road to Redwood City.

Why is Lettuce always shipped East with ICE

California ships out more than 36,000 carloads of lettuce annually, and every crate is packed with ICE. All attempts to ship lettuce by other kinds of refrigeration without ice have failed. The lettuce dried out and wilted because of too dry a temperature.

When shipped with ICE, the lettuce arrives in the East fresh, crisp and wholesome—even better than when it left California. That is because ONLY ICE gives exactly the proper temperature and humidity to keep delicate foods in perfect condition. This applies not only to lettuce, but to peas, cauliflower, artichokes, asparagus, sprouts, spinach and other vegetables.

The advantages of ice apply equally as well to home refrigeration. Ice not only provides the safest, simplest and cheapest way to preserve foods—it provides the best way.

Board Acts to Open New Street

The probability of the opening of a new street from Broadway to Webster street, between Main and Washington streets was heightened this week at a meeting held between property owners of the block through which the street would pass and the board of trustees of Redwood City. Practically every property owner affected was present and all expressed themselves as in favor of the proposed improvement.

Most of the property owners of the block addressed the board personally in favor of the proposed street. Among these were Carl Muller, Henry McGarvey, Charles Hansen, Miss Pauline Hansen, Louis Deluchi, Mrs. C. Cullen, G. B. Merrill and J. W. Poole.

All members of the board were favorable to the proposal and stated that the construction of the street would do a great deal to relieve the congested traffic condition on Main street.

Finally after full discussion of the matter, City Attorney Mansfield was instructed to proceed with the necessary actions for the formation of an improvement district. The necessary proceedings will be ready for action by the board at its regular meeting next Monday night.

A report was submitted by City Engineer Charles Dimmitt on the estimated cost of the proposed improvement. Dimmitt's esimate of the cost of the improvement, exclusive of the purchase of the right-of-way, was $59,000.

The scope of the improvement as considered in the city's engineer's report was as follows:

"Concerning the construction work involved in opening the street and for the purpose of making the same a business thoroughfare.

"A concrete aqueduct or storm sewer for carrying the waters of Redwood creek is to be constructed from the concrete bridge already constructed across Webster street in a straight line to connect with the concrete bridge across Broadway. This will consist of a double barreled culvert, each 10 feet square, and conforming to the section of the Webster street bridge, and will be approximately 800 feet long. The estimated cost for such a structure is in the amount of $52,000.

"I would recommend that the material excavated for the aqueduct be used, or an equal amount allowed, for filling in of the present channel of Redwood creek at least to the present top of bank.

"There will be required about 5000 cubic yeards of material for filling in of the street up to the level desirable. The elevation at Webster street is 8.0 feet and at Broadway 4.0 feet above mean high water of San Francisco bay, and the grade for the new street will be in a straight line between these points. I would estimate cost for this fill at $1 per yard, or a total of $5000.

"A sewer must be built on each side of the street—the sewer on the easterly side to discharge directly into the sewer on Broadway; the sewer on the westerly side of street to discharge into Washington street and for this purpose a right-of-way or easement must be procured from the new street to Washington street, either along the line dividing the lands of Poole and McGarvey, Flynn and Muller, or through the lands of Poole. Cost of sewer estimated at $1.25 per front foot.

"The paving of the street should preferably be not undertaken until at least two years after the completion of the fill. Temporary pavement could be provided at nominal cost and maintained during this period, to allow for settlement of filled ground. For permanent pavement, the section proposed is as follows: width of roadway, 50 feet; paved with a combined curb and gutter, the gutter width to be eight (8) feet and thickness of eight (8) inches, the balance of roadway to be paved with concrete six (6) inches in thickness and two (2) inches of asphalt pavement, sidewalk to be twelve (12) feet in width from the back of curb to property line. The estimated cost for this construction is the amount of $16,000.

Summary

THREE FINED BY COURT FOR DISTURBING PEACE

A three-handed fight engaged in by C. Lopez, F. Vargas and F. Gutierrez at South Redwood Sunday night, resulted in the arrest of the three by C. L. Collins and Edward McAuliffe. The trio was booked at the county jail on a charge of disturbing the peace.

When the three men appeared before the court of City Recorder Mansfield on Monday they were sentenced to pay a fine of $10 each or spend ten days in the jail. All three paid the fine and were released.

WOODSIDE

Mrs. N. T. Messer left on Monday for New York to visit Mr. and Mrs. Daniel C. Jackling, who have been spending the winter there. She will return with the Jacklings about the middle of May.

The second game of the school league series brought better luck to the team from the Woodside school. The local boys won their game on Wednesday by a score of 28 to 10 against the San Carlos school. The team is composed of Carl Shine, pitcher, and captain, Walter Kelley, catcher; Paul Silva, first base; Joe Nunes, second base; Carrington Pringle, third base; Ed Doore, short-stop; Geo. Dirks, right field; Bennet Bartholomew, center field; Jack Neuman, left field.

The Parent-Teacher Association is planning a May fete to be held at the school grounds on the afternoon of May 7th. There will be a picnic with games, athletic contests and a ball game. A social meeting of the Association was held at their newly renovated quarters on Wednesday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. John Short and family returned on Tuesday from a trip to the Big Sur region, where they have a ranch fronting a half mile along the ocean wall. They plan to build a cabin there for summer ocupancy.

Robert Schurman and family will arrive on Friday to occupy their house bought some time ago from J. M. Litchfield. The house has been in the hands of the carpenters and painters for several weeks and has been entirely remodeled.

Mrs. Hugh O'Neill, with her two sons, Alphonsus and Emmett, will make a trip to Dunsmuir with the idea of making their residence there if the conditions are favorable.

Miss Mildred Fraizier of Woodside was painfully inujred Saturday night in an automobile collision at a bridge on the Canyada road.

About thirty members of the San Mateo Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor were visitors at the Woodside church on Sunday last. The young people were spending the week end in camp in the hills but found time from their outing to attend the church services.

The residents of Woodside are hoping that our new supervisor will make a visit out this way and discover how badly our roads are in need of repair.

Menlo Chamber Commerce Holds Annual Banquet

The annual banquet of the Menlo Park Chamber of Commerce at Cafe de Paris last Monday evening was a success in every way. About 100 guests were present. The menu was all that could be desired and the speeches were unusually interesting.

Toastmaster E. E. Quayle started the speech making by calling upon the president of the chamber of commerce, J. H. Sullivan who delivered a very able address setting forth the proposed developments of the peninsula as advocated by the chamber. Mr. Sullivan read the following proposed developments:

1. Hetch Hetchy water and power.

2. Transportation.

3.Completion of highways already begun and the construction of new highways.

4. The development of the bay marsh lands into industrial districts.

5.The obtaining of a belt line railroad from San Francisco to Dumbarton bridge.

6. The development of a comprehensive sewerage and drainage system to deep water channels.

Commenting on these proposed improvements, President J. H. Sullivan said:

"We feel that the development of the San Francisco metropolitan area must be met by a broad and general recognition of the conditions that now control the peninsula.

The Hetch Hetchy system is needed to take the water to a reservoir and main distributing line along the Skyline boulevard, to supply the wonderful hill section, where thousands of acres of beautiful home sites lying dormant because above the present water system level. And to supply the industrial section that will grow along the bay line when it is know that an abundance of pure water is available.

"The peninsula has applied to the Southern Pacific for an uptown depot and more frequent and faster trains; and to connect the San Mateo and Palo Alto ends of their electric lines; all with no results. It has also applied to the United Railroads, but their conditions are not feasible. It now remains with San Francisco and her municipal lines to cover the peninsula district and give to the seekers of suburban homes the benefit of adaquate and fast transporiation to the heart of San Francisco.

"The early completion of the Bayshore highway to San Jose, the widening of the present highway, and the construction of new highways are important.

"The development of the now unused bay marsh lands into industrial sites, with reasonably priced lands and electric power, will offer inducements that will attract branches of eastern manufacturers.

"A belt line railroad constructed from San Francisco to the Dumbarton bridge, connecting with spur tracks to the various industries, available to all railroads, and giving a safe, fast freight and passenger service, eliminating all dangerous crossings because of its location and avoiding the slowing down of trains through towns is needed. This belt line, being really an extension of the state harbor belt line, should carry with it terminal rates through all its branches. The building of this belt line to form a bulkhead wall behind which lands may be reclaimed by the dredging and deepening of the bay channels, using the dredged material to fill in. This bulkhead wall also to give a point beyond which all sanitation outlets should go.

"The Menlo Park Chamber of Commerce feels that in the carrying out of the above fundamentals Greater San Francisco will hold the supremacy that belongs to her as the greatest city of the Pacific coast. The peninsula will contribute to her aggrandizement and share in her benefits."

E. E. Quayle spoke interestingly concerning the potential possibilities of the peninsula which he described as an undeveloped empire capable of giving homes to a million people. He spoke of the water ways, climate and scenery in eloquent language.

Mayor James Rolph spoke feelingly of San Mateo county and honed some day the two communities of San Francisco and San Mateo county would merge so that our tax rate would be lowered by taxes from the skyscrapers of San Francisco. In well phrased sentences he told of the benefits that would be derived by such a merger. Mr. Rolph pledged his best efforts on behalf of San Francisco in the development of San Francisco.

Major C. S. Kirkbride made a lengthy address confining himself to the recreational development of the county. He said that more forests should be spared for future generations as well as some beaches and urged the building of more roads down the peninsula from the city. He touched lightly on annexation saying that with the borough system and a few amendments to the present laws all the people would be satisfied by such annexation and that the county would boom.

At the close of the meeting the following resolution introduced by Frank R. Cain, passed:

"That this body, composed principally of members of the Menlo Park Chamber of Commerce, recommend that a committee of not less than 50 be appointed for the purpose of taking up and carrying through the work of development of the various public improvements mentioned in this resolution.

"That the said committee be known as the Greater San Francisco Metropolitan Area Development Club.

"That the president of the Menlo Park Chamber of Commerce do appoint on said committee 25 men from the various cities, towns, villages and communities in San Mateo county as members of said committee.

Tat we recommend that the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, the Mission Street Merchants' Association and the Down Town Association each appoint five members.

"That the 30 members so appointed do name 20 additional members, 10 of whom shall be named from San Francisco and 10 from San Mateo county.

"That when all the members shall have been named to serve upon said committee, that then said committee shall duly organize itself and elect a permanent chairman and secretary, and such other officers as may be necessary to carry on the work of said committee."

52 Candidates Are Examined In Superior Court

Last Tuesday in the Superior court a class of 52 candidates were examined by Paul Armstrong, district naturalization director, for admittance to citizenship. After a gruelling examination nearly all passed muster and tiny flags were pinned on their coats by the Women's Relief Corps

The Women's Relief Corps started proceedings by presenting Miss Pansy J. Abbott, the popular county superintendent of schools, who in an eloquent address, admonished the applicants for citizenship to be always worthy of the honor and privilege they were about to bestow upon them. She urged them to be loyal to the flag, the emblem of liberty, and to always observe the laws of the country.

Anne Maria Lind of San Bruno hoobled up to the chair and after brief questioning, was admitted. She was apt in her answers and although she had seen eighty-five summers come and go, was alert and apparently enthusiastic to become an American citizen. She was born in England in 1842 and was a resident of the United States in 1866, leaving some time after for the English colonies. She again arrived in the United in 1901, and for a long time has lived in San Bruno. The old lady was quite loquacios and quick in answer to the questions of the examiner. Mrs. Lind said she was proud to become a citizen and hoped to be spared to vote for many presidents. She did not state her politics.

A bright son of the land of Moussolini when asked who made the laws of the country, promptly replied that the board of supervisors of the county of San Mateo did. While it is perhaps true that the board does some time attempt to regulate the affairs of the country it cannot be said that the members of the board of supervisors of San Mateo County make the laws of the United States.

VALUE OF BUTTER FAT IN CHILD'S DIET
By C. Ulysses Moore, M. D.
Portland, Oregon
Member Gorgas Memorial Institute

The greater value of butterfat as compared with vegetable fat in the human diet is no longer a matter of personal preference or mere conjecture. Pigs, puppies and rats consume food similar to man's that experiments with these animals give us valuable information for child feeding. At the University of Oregon Medical School we conducted the following experiment for this purpose.

Eight puppies from the same litter were divided, at five weeks of age, into two groups of four each. The diets of the two were identical except that one group, "A", received a vegetable fat, while the other group, "B", received an equal amount of butter

After nine weeks the results were startling. The dogs receiving butter had gained an average of thirty pounds each; those receiving the vegetable fat had averaged a gain of only seventeen pounds each. The butter-fat group were alert, sleek, friendly, normally healthy animals. The other group were thin, nervous, sorry, and bedraggled specimens of doghood. Two of these died a few days latter.

X-ray pictures demonstrated the difference in the bones of the two groups. Those of group "B" had leg bones with strong, thick shafts, and firm, definite ends, closely fitted together, showing a normal amount of mineral. The bones of the "A" group were deficient in mineral as shown by the thin outer shells and loosely fitting, almost transparent ends. Such bones bend and break easily; such loose-fitting joints fail to suport the body weight and result in bowlegs, knock knees and flat feet. The vegetable fat dogs had all these defects.

Two months in a puppy's life are equal to approximately to three years in a child's life. The effects upon a child are not so quickly seen but are just as sure and definite. Diet during childhood is more important than in adult life; hence the children should have butter even if the parents have to do without. One-third of the young men examined by the draft during the World war were unfit for army service; the most common defect was flat-foot. More careful feeding during infancy and childhood is necessary to insure, strong, healthy adults.

The first cost of butter substitutes may be less in dollars and cents, but their ultimate cost in health and happiness is beyond computation. Butter to the growing child is what yeast is to bread—the little leaven that leaveneth the whole lump. This is because butter contains vitamins necessary to human life. Let us give our children a chance to have life and to "have it more abundantly."

MARY SITS IN THE WINDOW
By J. Eastman Sheehan, M. D.

When the fire leaped at her she threw up her hands and arms to shield her eyes. They invariably do, for the action is involuntary. Very likely her eyes were saved. But her nose and lips and chin and neck were burned. As she held her arms raised in front of her the fire burned them on the lower side clear to the armpits, searing the breats and chest at the same time. The doctor came and did what could be done and her life was saved.

Then year followed year and as time went on new conditions developed. There were scars and the scars grew hard and strong. Those on the neck dragged and dragged at her chin, until at last it rested on her chest and she could not move her head either backward or to the side. She could not breathe properly. With her head always bent over she could not see out in front, only down towards the ground. Her arms were so tightly held by the scars on the shoulders and under the armpits that she had no use of them. Her hands were held stiffly out in front; she could not use them for work, could not even bring them to her face.

The doctor was sorry but there was nothing he could do about it, nor did he know of anything that could be done.

Mary gradually gave up hope. She knew she was a burden to her friends, yet there was nothing whatever she could no for herself. She avoided her friends. She stayed at home and at home she kept to herself. Mary sat in the window and watched the world go by.

It is indeed an ill wind that blows good to none, for it was the war that brought hope for Mary in its train. Some doctors may as yet be only dimly aware of it, but, taking advantage of one of the lessons learned in the war-hospitals, the home hospitals have begun to establish surgical departments where all these troubles like Marys can be relieved. There is almost sure to be one within reasonably easy reach.

That scar which holds her face down is taken away and in its place is put good healthy skin from some other part of her own body. The drag is released. Mary can lift her head again. She can look straight ahead and all around. She can breathe in comfort. She can move her arms and make use of her hands. With the dragging lines of scar gone and the face and neck covered with smooth flexible skin she is no longer unsightly. She is self-supporting and cheerful, does not shun company. Plastic surgery has taken her out of her window.

THE IODINE CRAZE
By C. E. e M. Sajous, M. D.
Philadelphia, Pa.
Member Gorgas Memorial Institute

The widespread use of iodine and iodized table salt has developed in the United States into a reckless fad extremely harmful to millions of people, and now known to have been the indirect cause of many deaths.

While taken to prevent goiter (an enlargement of the thyroid gland in front of the neck,) the result of their misuse has been to increase greatly the number of severe cases of the disease, and to diminish markedly the chances of cure, both medical and surgical.

Some hardly perceptible goiters, which, particularly in young people, might have retrogressed and disappeared in a few months, are converted into toxic goiters, a form which, unless soon mastered, leads to disorders of the heart, nervous system, intestinal tract, etc.

Children, not in the least predisposed to goiter, become weak, lose flesh, acquire an unusually rapid pulse, experience shortness of breath when climbing or running, become irritable with, in some instances, the development of immoral propensities due to abnormal excitement of the brain, nervous and generative systems.

The use of iodized salt is particularly harmful since it means the administration, day in and day out, of a stimulant far more active than alcohol to a system, our body, which in reality contains but but a minute quantity of iodine as one of its biochemical constituents.

It is not a food, but a pure stimulant of all body activities which, given in excess, might fittingly be compared to the accelerator of an automobile, when so "stepped on" as to raise the speed to sixty miles an hour.

We see its efefcts in the disease known as "exophthalmic goiter" due to the excessive secretion of iodine by the thyroid gland, in which the neck growth supplemented by bulging of the eyes. The patient's skin is hot, his heart beats are extremely rapid, he is excitable, nervous, sometimes mentally abnormal, emaciated, though his appetite be enormous to replace the fuel consumed. On the whole, he is the picture of a racing engine—racing to self destruction. And this is what the injudicious use of iodine, or iodized salt, predisposes to in any woman, man, or child.

How did the iodine craze originate?

Its origin is traceable to the painstaking efforts of two physicians who found that, by giving small does of a weak preparation of iodine to school children a time twice a year, they could, in the goiter belts of the Middle West, reduce greatly the incidence of goiter in these particular districts.

Again, surgeons found that by giving iodine in cases about to be operated, their surgical results were greatly improved because of the sustaining effects of the iodine.

Heralded far and wide, this was taken to mean that a "new agent for the prevention and cure of goiter" had been discovered! Iodine and iodized table salt, advocated by well-meaning but ignorant people on the one side, and manufacturers on the other, started the cra

CHAPTER X

Pardaloe Turns Diplomat.

General Roper waited only till he was able to travel to go west with his location engineers. He said very little to Wentworth before he started; only that when he came back he would have a talk with Selwood.

Wentworth himself spent the week between Sleepy Cat and Thief River, disturbed only and surprised by Selwood's resignation as superintendent of the freighting line. It required all of Wentworth's and Carpy's powers of persuasion to induce him to hold on till an acceptable successor could be found. Neither Doctor Carpy, despite his blunt common sense, nor Wentworth, the long-headed master of frontier transportation, was capable of analyzing the mystery of the change that had come over Selwood. They wrongly surmised that his settled moodiness was due to the fresh outbreak of his grievance against his grandfather; had they been as close to Selwood as Bill Pardaloe was, and as good an observer, they would have known that less than a hundred pounds of Sleepy Cat femininity had wrecked his good nature, his optimism, and his peace of mind.

When they saw him finish, with libations of wine, the recital of his family wrongs, they did not realize that he would likewise have been glad to drown all recollection of the last scene he ever expected to have with Christie Fyler. Bill Pardaloe, watching Selwood unobserved, knew better than to ask questions, but he himself had a soft spot in his heart for Christie, and though his duties no longer took him to the store, where Fyler's business was dwindling, Bill made it a point to drop around at times and see what he could see and hear what he could hear.

He always lounged into the store in the same manner—with the fingers of one long, ungainly hand resting on the heft of his bowie knife, stuck at his hip, and with his arms free for action. Invariably, too, with his head poked inquiringly forward—which set his long nose well ahead of his centre of gravity, with the corners of his mouth pulled down to suit his pessimistic mood, and with his small, piercing eyes wide open with suspicious gloom

Such a man would hardly be expected to make much of a hit with Christie Fyler. Yet Bill Pardaloe came to stand higher in her favor than any frontiersman in Sleepy Cat. Honesty underlay his crudeness, his great strength inspired respect, and Christie, with a woman's instinct budded on a girl's heart, liked him.

A fortnight had gone by since Christie dismissed Selwood, when Pardaloe, puzzled by the gambler's behavior and looking for some explanation, dropped in on Christie.

She was in the middle of the store with a feather duster in her hand when he arrested her attention. He did not know why her greeting was so very cordial that morning; but next to seeing the man she wanted to see and did not want to see, she was delighted to welcome Bill—to see him was closest to seeing Selwood, anyway.

She laughed heartily at the condition of his boots. "Bill," she exclaimed, "if you don't take some time off and black those boots I won't speak to you again. Honestly, Bill," she asked in pleading tones, "did you ever black those boots?"

Pardaloe grinned; every time Christie said "Bill" he melted like a roll of butter. "Christie, when I was in the army I had t' black my boots every day. I swore if I ever got out I'd never black a pair of boots again in my life—'n', by cracky, I' kep' my word, too."

"But, Bill, wouldn't you break your word—just once—for me?"

Pardaloe looked at his dust-covered footings, shifted his cud, and countered craftily. "What difference would it make to you?"

"Did You Ever Black Those Boots?"

"Why"—Christie, nonplussed for an instant, looked up innocently—"it would cheer me up so, Bill—I'm blue!" And Christie laughed.

"Say, Christie," asked Pardaloe, taking a piece of plug tobacco from his pocket, "what's a-matter 'tween you and John Selwood?"

The shock to Christie was perfectly hidden in her astonishment. She opened her eyes as if inviting the most rigorous inspection. "Why, nothing! Why do you ask that? At least," she went on—and then a little hateful telltale color rose, "nothing that I know of—why, Bill?"

Pardaloe, having discharged his fowling piece, chewed his fresh morsel of tobacco into place, looking no longer at Christie but at the floor somewhat to one side of her, his mouth drawn down to a gloomy curve. "He don't come here no more," he observed at length.

Christie tossed her head. "Well, he's a very busy man, and, of course, has lots of friends besides us—"

Pardaloe groped steadily ahead. "Are you his friend?" he asked with nasal skepticism.

She professed astonishment. "Why, yes, I hope so, Bill"—Christie raised her voice—"what are you asking all these questions for?" Then a panic seized her. "What do you mean, Bill? Is Selwood hurt?"

For an instant the book of her woman's heart lay open before the big fellow—her look of sudden, deadly fear. Bill had a pretty good idea now.

He shook his head to her question. "No, no. Nothing like that at all, Christie. But what's wrong 'tween you and John?"

Pardaloe was treading on thin ice for a mule boss; and among the dangers he had not counted on was the reaction in a woman's feelings after she has betrayed her secret.

With a flush of anger Christie suddenly chilled. "I'm sure I've no idea what you're talking about, Bill. And it's very silly to keep on talking about it." So saying, Christie became very busy with her dry-goods and left Pardaloe looking after her retreating heels and studying the floor with even more than his habitual concentration.

But he was not easily discouraged. Having thought seriously over the situation and braced himself slightly for a second attempt, Pardaloe returned to the store an hour later to straighten "the girl's"—for so he called Christie—troubles out.

"Christie," he insisted gravely, "it ain't no use our beatin' around the bush. There's trouble 'tween you and John—" She protested, denied, interrupted—it was all one. Pardaloe probed until poor Christie took refuge in a woman's last weapon—tears. This argument threatened to reduce Pardaloe to the same state, but it cleared the atmosphere, and Christie, touched by his honest interest, told him the story of the scene between Starbuck and Selwood and herself that eventful morning in the store. "It wouldn't have been so bad," trembled Christie, grieved and resentful, "if he had even tried to explain or excuse it. He said himself," she murmured in final reproach of Selwood and his pleader, "he was just a common gambler."

This seemed to give Pardaloe a favorable opening. "Dash it," he thundered, not loud, but deep in his reverberations, "he ain't no common gambler. There's no man on the Overland Trail dast set up against him in a game of poker all night—if he wants to play. I tell y'—I know—I've tried it. And why he can't talk up to you, Christie, is because, dash it, he's in love with you—that's why. I tell y'. I'm a married man, Christie, 'n' I understand such things."

She refused to hear another word, and Pardaloe went away not exactly knowing whether he had helped his favorite young man in Sleepy Cat or hurt him by extolling his technical skill.

Selwood slept later than usual that day. After his solitary meal in the dining-room, he went down to the barn, where Carpy found him later and took him to the doctor's office in the hotel. There he sat for some time with Selwood in serious confab. "I'll agree, John," he said, countering a contemptuous remark of Selwood's, "there's been a good deal of loose Vigilante talk here, different times. But this time it isn't going to stop with talk. This town's got the worst reputation in the mountains."

"Whom are they going to clean it up with?" demanded Selwood contemptously. "These old Indian traders—Roubidoux, Van Tambel, Otto Kickbusch—and the real estate boomers? I want to tell you it's a man's job to clean out Starbuck and Atkins' crowd."

"Well"—Carpy hesitated and summoned a twinkling smile—"they thought maybe you might take a small personal interest in the enterprise—"

"I shan't," declared Selwood without hesitation, "and you can tell 'em so. I'm getting to be a pretty fair hand at minding my own business."

"The drift now," continued Carpy, "is that if the town ain't cleaned up, the railroad will go clean around it and leave us out in the cold. The real estate men here say their business is ruined—it's got so bad folks is afraid to buy property. Then there's the merchants—John Cole says if this keeps up they might as well shut up shop and ship their goods to Bear Dance or Medicine Bend."

"Well," exclaimed Selwood with an impatient expletive, "let 'em clean the town up. Clean it up—I've no objection."

"I can't say all's in my mind, John, without betraying confidences. But things is set. This is Saturday night, and on Saturday night, you know, every cattle-thief and horse-thief from Calabasas comes to town for a spree. Tonight they'll all get in; but they won't many get out. They're going to finish with every blackleg and dive-keeper, bad man and gambler in this town within the next twenty-four hours—that's exactly what's coming."

Selwood bent a piercing look on his informant. "Does that include me, Doc?"

"There's no objection to the way you run your place, John—if yours was the only place or the other places were like yours. And you'll have friends among the Vigilantes, anyway. But when the thing starts there won't be no fine lines drawn, John; you know that," continued the doctor, trying to convey his warning inoffensively, "and there may be mistakes when the torch gets going. My advice is for you to pull out till this thing blows over, and come back when you feel like it."

Selwood rose as to end the talk. Carpy had seen him angry more than once, but never had he seen the mild-mannered gambler enraged. In language so violent that he would have been ashamed of it in cooler moments, he expressed his opinion of all Vigilantes in general and Sleepy Cat Vigilantes in particular. Carpy tried to interrupt, tried to listen, tried to calm him down—all was useless.

"Dash it, John," he exclaimed at length, testy himself, "if I'm nothing else, I'm your doctor—hold on!"

"I expect to hold on," retorted Selwood rudely. "Tell your Vigilantes they'll find me on the hill. And tell 'em to come 'fixed,' for some of 'em will stay there with me."

"But here's another thing I want you to think of, John," resumed Carpy, who was pertinacious. "What about Dave Tracy in all this? You'll have your fight—you'll damage some Vigilantes; maybe some of 'em your own friends; maybe get damaged yourself. Even supposing you make your getaway, what about Dave? He's helpless. How should you feel, John, if Dave was dragged out and strung up with that river bunch? Don't you owe it to Dave to get him out of the way before this thing begins?"

The suggestion came like a blow to Selwood. It struck home. Selwood had forgotten his wounded partner. His mind worked fast. He looked at Carpy—but not with less determination. "You're right," he said tersely. "I'll get Dave into the clear. But I'll be back on the hill by the time your friends get started."

He rose, very angry, to go; then he turned suddenly on the doctor. "There's one thing I'll ask of you, Doc; while I'm getting Dave away, I want you to promise me to see that no harm comes to Christie Fyler—"

"John, I'll see to that if it's the last thing on earth I see to."

"I don't care much about her father—he's no protection to her; but he's her father, and no harm must come to him in this mix-up, either."

"You've got my word, John."

* * * * * * *

Selwood was not a man to let his anger override his common sense for long. Most of all, the helpless condition of Tracy, like a relentless curb on a willful horse, forced him to consider what must be done to save him from the mob fury. None knew better than Selwood what would be let loose when the fight started. He knew the men on both sides of the town and knew that once under way there would be no quarter for anybody—that behind the masks there would be more than one personal score to even up, regardless of right or justice; that there would be, in that mob, personal malice set on personal vengeance, and that Carpy's warning could not be disregarded.

Christie had been in the habit for some time of visiting Tracy in the sick-tent and taking him such little delicacies as her ingenuity could supply. She realized how close he was to Selwood, and whoever was a trusted friend of Selwood's Christie, somehow, liked.

Pardaloe, feeling that help was needed in his efforts to straighten out the differences that kept Selwood and Christie apart, had taken Tracy into his confidence, and the old man was ready to do what he could to help.

On this Saturday afternoon he held Christie for a little chat, and as soon as he could introduced the delicate subject that Pardaloe had already broached to her.

"Bill Pardaloe," he went on, continuing his remarks, "said you was afraid of Selwood because you thought he was a gambler."

Christie's eyes fell—she would not comment on it; besides, Tracy himself was a gambler. "Mr. Pardaloe," she said impatiently, "says a great many things about matters that don't concern him—or anybody else, for that matter. How is your back today, Mr. Tracy?"

Tracy was not so easily thrown off. He said what he wanted to say. "I don't call Selwood a gambler—and I've been trying long enough to make him one. He ain't built for the business. The ice is too thin around his heart. Any old woman can come along to him with a tale of woe and he'll upset the whole durn town over it. He's fillin' in for me, at my place up on the hill," explained Tracy defensively, "that's about all."

Selwood, knowing nothing of the well-meant if misdirected activities of his two crude but stanch defenders, started for the horse barn, after Carpy's talk, and for Tracy's tent, reflecting that with Tracy himself he should have a delicate job on his hands; to induce the old man to move at all would be a triumph. He stopped at the warehouse first to tell the wagon boss, briefly, what he had heard and what to do. "If there's going to be trouble here I don't want to get caught with a warehouse full of goods unprotected," he said to Lefever. "Get hold of every teamster we've got in town and hold every man here to protect company property. Work fast."

"I'll have 'em all rounded up in half an hour by the watch," returned Lefever. "What are you going to do, yourself, John?"

It was the second time Selwood had been asked the question. He did not know; but he flung some kind of an answer to the wagon boss, and crossed the street to the barn. McAlpin, in the front gangway, was washing a harness.

Selwood's orders were brief. "Get up a team of saddle horses, Jim. Hitch 'em to the light democrat wagon—the one that's covered. Muzzle Chloe carefully and put her under the seat. And give me the best team in the barn that's saddle broke—"

"Nance and Jim," interposed McAlpin, "and they're crazy to go."

"Saddle my horse," added Selwood, "and put a couple of good saddles into the wagon, fill the bed pretty well with hay, and throw a couple of clean army blankets over it. Put in two canteens and enough food for four of us, two days." Pardaloe walked up from the stalls. "Get hold of Bob Scott, Bill," said Selwood to the mule boss. "I want to use him right away. He'll drive," explained Selwood to McAlpin. "And as soon as you find Scott," added Selwood to Pardaloe, "report to me at Tracy's tent. But don't talk before Dave—work quick, will you, Bill?"

Pardaloe hobbled briskly out after Scott, and Selwood spoke again to McAlpin. "I suppose you've heard this talk that's going around?"

"Vigilantes?"

"They've been talking a good while," continued Selwood, purposely ignoring particulars, "but Dave must be taken where he'll be safe."

"He must, John."

"If things should get going we'll have our hands full looking after company property."

"You'll be going with Dave?"

"I'll be back sometime in the night," returned Selwood, evasively. "You've nothing to fear, McAlpin. If things start, get the hostlers together—you've got guns and ammunition."

McAlpin, as Selwood walked away, flung one question after him. Just the question Selwood did not want to hear: "What'll you be doing, John?"

Selwood chopped him off. "Whatever's to be done!" he answered, snappishly.

McAlpin scratched his head as he studied the retreating footsteps of his taciturn boss; he had ventured one question. But he had forty questions that were burning the tip of his tongue.

Who would lead the Vigilantes; how far they intended to go in their clean-up; when they meant to strike first and where; whether they could handle Starbuck and Atkins and their friends—for whose prowess McAlpin had a sneaking and canny respect; just where Selwood would come in in the fight; what measures he would take for his own safety; and lastly, what was to become of the big place on the hill that had cost so much money—these queries the Scotsman revolved rapidly in his mind, until Selwood, treading the path lightly and with the briskness of unreckoning manhood, turned the first corner and disappeared from view. But fate, greatest of all gamblers, quite understood how to upset a poise indifferent to the threats of men; just as Selwood turned the corner it presented to him, almost threw into his arms—rounding the corner from the other way and walking as briskly as he was—Christie Fyler

She started visibly—as he did invisibly. Then in the suddenness of the encounter Selwood—never quick to adjust himself to meeting the woman whose mere glance could upset him—stiffly, almost ostentatiously, stepped aside, touched his hat, and hurried on a little faster. But after that, with his heart beating harder, he began to think and to surmise and to question himself and, of course, to regret. Their eyes, in this sudden and unexpected way, had met. It was only an instant, but the picture came back to him now of a sad expression in Christie's eyes—sad, at least, until she woke up and realized that she had run into Selwood, and then her eyes had quickly dropped; she had passed on.

It was his fault, he told himself. He had not even hesitated—he might have given her time to speak. He cursed his stiffness and contemptible pride for not having given her even an opportunity at such a time—a time pregnant with threatening possibilities for them both as well as for Sleepy Cat. He longed for a chance to meet her over again; still, his vanity would not allow him to turn back. So—while Christie was reproaching herself for not making the quick advance she wanted to make and now felt it had been her place to make when she saw the only man's face in the world that meant anything to her—both, unhappy, passed on, little reckoning of when and where they should meet again.

Selwood quite knew that his mission to Tracy would call for tact. He sat down on a camp stool beside his friend, and after a few conventional passes opened the one subject of his visit with an abrupt question. "Dave, how much do you figure you've got in our Sleepy Cat place? Whatever it is," he continued, as Tracy disclaimed any equitable interest in the hall that Selwood had paid for, "I'll trade you my interest in the Thief River mine for your interest up at Sleepy Cat."

Tracy was taken aback. "What you tryin' to do?" he asked presently. "Rob me or rob yourself? The mine's worth half a dozen of our Sleepy Cat outfit."

"Then," said Selwood definitely, "the hall's mine and the mine's yours. Is it a go?"

"Why, if you want it that way, yes—it is."

NAVY GEORGETTE IS POPULAR; ACCESSORIES ARE IMPORTANT

IT IS fashionable to have "the blues" this season, especially the navy blues. Rivalry is keen in the new modes between black and navy. Certain it is that navy is being very enthusiastically featured among latest style arrivals. Not only is navy indorsed for the frock, but many of the handsomest coats of the season are either of fine navy twill or cashmere with taffeta collars and trimmings, especially huge navy bows of the taffeta. Then, too, navy with white is almost winning over black with white.

Take this favor which now exists for navy, add to it the fact that sheer, softly feminine fabrics are the call of the mode, and the answer is navy georgette. It is a fact, navy georgette is as popular as ever and "then some." All things are in its favor—cool for summer time, sheer in texture yet of wondrous wearing qualities, always distinctive and presenting a well-dressed appearance, and best of all, a fabric which lends itself to manipulation such as a heavier material will not admit.

The adaptability of georgette is evidenced in the winsome gown in the picture. This mode was especially commended by the Fashion Art League of America as being of "good style" as well as thoroughly practical for afternoon wear. Note how the sheerness of the material yielded to both plaiting and tucking for the skirt. The bloused vestee is a mellow green, embroidered in blended flower colorings.

WINSOME GOWN OF GEORGETTE

Tailored georgette is one of the interesting new themes. Two-piece suits consisting of jacket and skirt, neatly stitched and finished at the edges with flat wide bindings brought to the tops of the edges, are bringing joy and comfort to womankind. They are wearable during warm days, yet present that smart tailleur appearance which always bespeaks good taste.

We are going to see myriads of fluttering draperies and jabots of every type on the chiffon and georgette dresses this summer. A favorite styling, especially for the sheer gay prints is that of a simple blouse-top, with collarless neckline and long close-fitting sleeves, and perhaps a jabot of self material to one side. At the waistline, however, simplicity finishes and elaboration begins for the skirt in floating draperies, flouncings, plaitings, and all sorts of self-fabric effects.

The big theme in fashion's realm will be the lace-trimmed georgette frock.

The significance of elegant accessories has never been more highly appreciated than at the present moment. It is part of the mode's program to instill in the mind of woman that her costume presents a perfect ensemble and that she is well dressed only when footwear, headwear, gloves and all the other accessory details play an harmonious accompaniment. In this day and age the smartly fashionable do not think of buying a hat or a pair of shoes, hosiery, a pocket book or gloves or even so small an item as a handkerchief, or a belt or a scarf independently of each other. Each is most conscientiously selected so as to fit into the scheme of things both as to color and design.

It is a bit bewildering to enter a shoe department or store these days. They look more like a museum of fine leather arts—and what is this we see, snakeskin, sharkskin, galuchat (which is a sort of fishskin cured like leather), lizard skin! Will wonders ever cease? They never will in the realm of shoes and gloves and hand bags, it seems.

It is the chic Parisienne who is wearing gloves matched to her purse, such as this picture displays. The skin of the famous Karung water serpent which is found in the very heart of French Indo-China is used for the making of this swagger glove and purse set.

SHOES, HANDBAG AND GLOVES

The exquisite hand bag with slippers to match shown to the right is made of pastel suede leather on which is block-printed a patterning which the designer declares suggests a map of the world, in much the same way as some of the new silk prints present nature scenes so artfully.

Pastel parchment kidskin with a stamped novelty fabric, is the chosen medium for the exquisite slippers shown below to the left. The large hand bag is felt, a material which has recently received the stamp of approval, especially for the pocket book which matches the felt hat.

The Subtle Touch

A floating cape or a wide scarf capable of intricate or simple treatment is a part of nearly every formal costume.

Latest in Headgear

Milliners and dressmakers are always running around seeking a chance to paint the lily. They have jumped on the beret as their latest victim. The plain blue basque headgear with only the little woolen tab at the top for ornament is now being adorned with hand-made feather birds on the front. These carry out the colorings of duck, pheasant, partridge, grouse, snipe, parrot and other birds.

Smart Sports Frocks

The smartest sports costumes at the southern resorts were three-piece affairs consisting of a skirt and jumper of knitted wool, with which was worn a cardigan jacket of the same material, either matching or contrasting in color.

Lack of Hospitality Toward "Poteen" King

Accused of manufacturing "poteen," the famous Irish moonshine, the king of the bootleggers of the Galway region was sentenced recently to pay a fine of $50 or spend three months in the jail. On the day appointed for his choice he appeared at the gates of the prison and announced that he would serve his time, as he was unable to pay the fine.

He had not, however, complied with the rule of the prison to provide himself with a police escort and a committal warrant. Admittance to the prison was refused. The following day he again applied for admission, with the same result. Vowing that he would pay off the fine by distributing more of his troublesome "poteen," he turned away from the inhospitable prison and went back to Connemara.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Powers Demand Reparation From Cantonese—Chen Proposes Inquiry.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

CHINA continued to hold the center of the stage during the week. Identical notes were handed to the Cantonese government at Hankow by the consular officers of the United States, Great Britain, France, Italy and Japan, demanding apologies and reparations for the Nanking outrages.

Each note demanded punishment for the commanders and the Nationalist troops responsible for the Nanking murders, injuries, and property damage; an apology by the Nationalist chief commander for the outrages, including a definite statement covering guarantees against similar occurrences in the future, and complete reparations for personal injuries to foreigners and for the property damaged. Seven foreigners met death and "nameless outrages" were committed against foreign women during the Nanking rioting.

In his replies Foreign Minister Chen proposed an international commission to investigate the Nanking "incident," not admitting the responsibility of the Nationalist troops for the outrages. In the replies to America and Great Britain he stated those nations bombarded the defenseless city of Nanking. In the French and British replies he charged those nations with shelling the defenseless Shameen district of Shanghai. Otherwise the replies were practically identical.

Soviet Russia, as was expected, severed diplomatic relations with the Peking government because of Marshal Chang Tso-lin's raid on the soviet embassy buildings. But the Russians laid the chief blame on the "imperialistic powers" and disavowed any intention of declaring war on the Chinese. They simply demanded the withdrawal of troops from the embassy property, the release of the arrested officials and the return of all documents and property seized. Large concentrations of soviet troops on the Manchuria frontiers were reported, but it was believed Russia would make no real demonstration against the Chinese until her troubles on her western borders are settled. The evacuation of Americans from Peking and Honan province continued, many of them being removed to Japan and Corea. The families of Minister MacMurray and his staff have left the northern capital.

Meanwhile matters were not going well for the Cantonese. The split between the radical and conservative wings widened and Gen. Chiang Kai-shek, the conservative generalissimo, had his troops raid the headquarters of the Red labor unions in Shanghai and other centers. The workers fought back desperately and more than one hundred of them were killed in conflicts with the soldiers, and many others were wounded. Chiang was determined to break up the radical unions, but the immediate result of his raids was the calling of a general strike in Shanghai. The general went to Hankow for a conference in which he hoped to establish the control of the moderate party over the Nationalist government.

Cantonese armies that had begun the advance northward from the Yangtse met with severe reverses and were driven back to the south side of the river, losing Pukow, opposite Nanking, though later reports said they had retaken that city. The northern troops succeeded in crossing the Yangtse at Kiangyin, threatening the route between Chinkiang and Shanghai.

ORGANIZED labor in the United States was aroused by an important decision of the Supreme court in the case of the Journeymen Stone Cutters' association which had instructed its members not to handle the product of 23 Indiana stone quarrying companies because they employed nonunion labor. The companies had asked an injunction and the lower courts had denied it, but the Supreme court reversed the finding, declaring that the refusal of members of a union to handle or work on material made by nonunion labor is an illegal restraint of interstate trade and a violation of the Sherman anti-trust law. Justices Brandeis and Holmes dissented. The former in his opinion said: "If, on the undisputed facts in this case, refusal to work can be enjoined, congress created, by the Sherman law and the Clayton act, an instrument of imposing restraints on labor which reminds us of involuntary servitude."

SACCO and Vanzetti were sentenced to death in the electric chair by Judge Webster Thayer in Dedham, Mass., and protests and appeals are coming in from all over this country and from many foreign lands. It is assumed that Governor Fuller of Massachusetts will review the case carefully and it is not unlikely that he will at least commute the sentence. The feeling is widespread that the defendants were entitled to a re-trial. When called up for sentence they made really eloquent appeals, asserting their innocence and bitterly attacking Judge Thayer for prejudice against them during the trial. Among those who have protested against the execution of the two radicals are British members of parliament, eminent French authors and American educators, as well as labor organizations almost everywhere.

BY ORDER of the directors of the Chicago board of trade, the Armour Grain company, the largest grain-trading concern in the world, was suspended from the board for dishonest acts. The drastic order by the directors of the grain exchange was taken after two years of investigation into the organization and the wrecking of the Grain Marketing company, a venture which, if it had been successful, might, it is said, have put the Armours and the Rosenbaums in control of the grain markets of the world.

The suspension of the company was recommended by a special committee of grain brokers which reported that the testimony it had taken clearly showed wrongful acts for which it deemed the Armour Grain company responsible. The acts alleged against the Armour Grain company were that in 1924 it had doctored its books so that in conveying its property and its grain into the Grain Marketing company, it showed greater quantities than actually delivered, and showed that good grain was in the elevators whereas in reality the Armour Grain company had on hand several million bushels of spoiled grain that was listed as of good quality.

NAVAL disarmament, if and when obtained, is seemingly up to the conference proposed by President Coolidge and scheduled for next June in Geneva. The League of Nations preparatory commission that has been struggling in the Swiss city to get ready an agenda, has failed to reach any agreement, the viewpoint of the French and the British being admittedly irreconcilable. The commission will merely report the points on which the delegates were able to agree, and these are not enough to be of any avail. The French sought limitation on a basis of total tonnage, while Britain, with the support of the United States, sought limitation by classes of ships, which was the basis for limitation agreed upon at the Washington arms conference. The French proposal was that limitation should be by tonnage, but that one year's notice would have to be given before any nation shifted tonnage from one class to another. Italy had a plan that was similar to that of the French but even less strict.

Before the commission adjourned Hugh Gibson, American delegate, served notice that the United States refused to accept any treaty for international or league control, not only because the United States is not a member of the League of Nations, but because it believes the efficacy and value of treaties depends entirely upon the sincerity of the signatories.

He stated, however, that "if the other states, members of the league, are able to reach an agreement among themselves on measures for the utilization of the league's machinery, and believe they will be efficacious, America would not stand in the way of their adopting measures deemed desirable, no matter how impracticable they seemed to the United States."

STORMS, floods and heavy snows afflicted the West and Middle West last week. The most serious of the disasters was a tornado that utterly destroyed the town of Rocksprings, Texas, Tuesday evening. About sixty of the residents were killed and nearly two hundred were injured. Red Cross and volunteer relief workers and cavalrymen from Fort Clark were soon on the ground and cared for the survivors.

As the week closed the lower Mississippi valley was threatened with one of the worst floods in its history, though the big government dikes were still holding back the rushing waters of the Mississippi into which were pouring the rain-swollen tributary streams. Conditions in Arkansas were most critical, and the town of Columbus, Ky., was menaced with destruction. In the Rocky Mountain states there were heavy snowfalls which interrupted traffic and endangered live stock, though they were regarded as an aid to crops and ranges. The snowstorms moved eastward, the highways being completely blocked in western Kansas and Nebraska.

Chile and Argentina experienced a severe earthquake in which twenty-one persons were killed and many hurt.

Dispatches from Madrid say bitter cold prevails in southern Spain and scores of poor persons are perishing from exposure.

PROSECUTIONS for dry law violations brought against the crews of vessels seized under anti-rum running treaties on the high seas were upheld by the United States Supreme court in a decision affirming the conviction of the captain and crew of the British ship Quadra, seized off the California coast in 1924.

The court held that the men could be punished for criminal conspiracy as soon as they came within jurisdiction of the United States, and that the whole purpose of the rum-running treaty with England would be defeated if contraband liquor could not be confiscated and the crew punished.

Prohibition enforcement in southern California is stirring up a fine row. Prohibition Administrator McReynolds has charged the customs officials with hampering and resisting the enforcement of the dry law, and now Sheriff Byers of San Diego declares conditions along the Mexican border are deplorable and appeals to Secretary Mellon for an efficient and effective customs service there.

BERT ACOSTA and Clarence D. Chamberlain, American civilian aviators, set a new mark for endurance flights by staying in the air 51 hours and 12 minutes. The previous record for continuous flying made in 1925 in France, was 45 hours, 11 minutes and 59 seconds. Starting from Roosevelt field, Long Island, in a Wright-Bellanca monoplane, the two Americans flew most of the time over a triangular course and landed at Mineola aviation field with all records broken. On the basis of the Alcock-Brown flight from Newfoundland to Ireland, they had been in the air long enough to have flown almost thrice across the Atlantic. They traveled far beyond the distance of a flight from New York to San Francisco and return.

Frank Lockhart, a young Los Angeles motorist, attained a speed of 171.02 miles an hour, the greatest ever made by an American driver, on a dry lake bed at Muroc, Calif. He was attempting to equal or better the record made by Major Segrave, English pilot, at Daytona Beach, Fla.

SENATOR McNARY of Oregon, after a breakfast and conference with President Coolidge and several Republican leaders of congress, went to his home state, stopping long enough in Chicago to tell the reporters that he was trying to work out a farm relief measure that would be acceptable to the President. He added, in effect, that no man can hope to be elected President of the United States who is hostile to agriculture, and unless a relief measure satisfactory to the farmers of the country is worked out between now and 1928, Calvin Coolidge will have bitter trouble, first to get enough delegates to nominate him and then to get elected if nominated.

Da Silva Swam River to Gain His Freedom

Discovery of the means by which Antonio Madia da Silva, former premier of Portugal, recently escaped from the fortress-prison of Trafaria reveal that he swam to liberty.

Some prisoners accused of common crimes were in cells adjoining that of da Silva. They managed to open a subterranean passage, meaning to escape in a body. As it passed along the wall of the room where the political prisoner was held, some of the men who belonged to the secret society of which da Silva is the supreme head informed him of the passage.

He gained access to it just before the officials came to take him and 1,500 other political prisoners to the Portuguese penal colonies.

The prison ship Laurenco Marques was ready to depart when a motor boat was dispatched to the fortress after da Silva, and it was discovered that he had disappeared. All the officers and guards were arrested and an exhaustive inquiry made, but it was not learned how he had managed to escape from this impregnable fortress, which juts out over the river Tagus and has only one heavily guarded entrance on land.

While the search was going on da Silva remained hidden in the fortress walls for ten days, stealing food at night from the kitchen through a loose plank in the floor. When every one supposed that he was beyond the frontier he swam the river, boarded a train and left the country.

THE CLEAN-CUT PIE

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

THE little waitress in the blue dress had an uncanny ability to take pie from the pan without breaking the crust or losing the slightest bit of the precious filling. And as the result of her ability she was unanimously elected by the other waitresses of the Coffee Cup Inn to stand at the pie case during each meal hour and slice off the delicious morsels for the patron's dessert.

But it happened that on the very morning when the pastry cook pushed several dozen steaming blackberry pies into the pie case the telephone rang and the news was given to the manager that the little waitress in the blue dress was sick. Four other waitresses hurried helplessly around the pie case at intervals attempting to discover the mysterious secret. They burned their fingers on the sizzling juice that oozed up through the curved little air holes in the crust. They pushed dull knives slowly into the pastry only to find that the crust followed the blade to the bottom of the pan while the delicious filling oozed messily to the top. It was a precarious situation and every assistant in the cafe was at his wit's end. Customers began to kick, the coffee urn boiled over and the manager had been out too late the night before.

The same situation existed when the good-looking young express driver arrived for his breakfast and sat down at the blue-eyed waitress' table. Somehow he always sat at that table and always she found herself expecting him. This morning she was in unusually bad spirits because of the terrible mess she had made of her pie cuts but was slightly cheered by the sight of him. She was very glad this was breakfast. He rarely ordered pie for breakfast.

Now, it happened that the blue-eyed waitress had already had the pleasure of three dates with the young express driver on three successive pay nights. She was angling for a fourth, with smiles, favors and pretty words at the end of her well-baited line. But she remembered that on her previous evenings with him she had adopted the famous domestic lines. She had led him to believe that she was highly efficient in all the arts of housekeeping, cooking and, what might prove more disastrous than any of them, of cutting pie. She knew he believed that she could cut pie to perfection.

"Good morning, little sweetie," he said tauntingly. He looked up into her blue eyes and noticed a vexed sort of expression. "Well, what's the matter with my little dimpled darling?"

She smiled at that, and instantly the hint of a tear disappeared.

"I burned my finger, but it doesn't hurt now," she replied.

"All right," he said, "don't cry over a little thing like that. Just run along and gather me up a nice, big, brown waffle and a cup of coffee. And don't be stingy with the sirup," he added as she started toward the counter with a satisfied smile.

She was happy now. Happy that she didn't have to embarrass herself by taking her lover a piece of messy pie. It didn't matter about the other customers. But her express driver—

She had just neared the counter preparatory to giving his order to the chaotic chef in the kitchen when she heard the tapping of a knife on a glass of water behind her. Quickly she looked and saw the young express driver beckoning to her. She hastily went to his table.

"I smell nice, fresh blackberry pie," he said, sniffing slightly at the blackberry laden air. "Just bring me along a nice, big piece of that, too."

The blue-eyed waitress turned quickly away so he could not see the sudden alarmed expression that crept to her face nor the tears that threatened to film her pretty blue eyes. She swore sadly under her breath, a thing she seldom did. Pie—this morning of all mornings he wanted pie. Then suddenly, an idea struck her. She would tell him the blackberry pie was all gone. That would solve the problem once and for all. At noon, if he wanted some, the pie would be cold and much easier to cut. Perhaps, also, the waitress in the blue dress would be back to her accustomed stand by that time. She sighed as she thought of the regular pie cutter. She was a pretty good scout after all, even if she did make eyes at the express driver.

She returned to his table and hesitated slightly as she started to tell him the story of the pie—that it was gone—all gone.

"The blackberry pie is—"

But she got no further. Her eyes drifted away from the express driver as she started to tell a lie and fell upon a figure in a blue dress just entering the front door. The express driver saw a sudden delighted expression cross his waitress' face as she saw the newcomer. And then she started on a run for the door and threw her arms around the new arrival.

"Oh, you dear thing!" cried the blue-eyed waitress without looking back at the express driver. "We've missed you so. We thought you were sick."

The waitress in the blue dress smiled knowingly and shook her head in the negative. She leaned toward her friend and whispered:

"Just had a late date last night and didn't want to get up. My sickness was a stall."

The waitress in the blue dress took her customary stand by the pie case and began slicing off perfectly cut pieces of the lovely pastry. The other girls stood around and appreciated for the first time the art that lay in this bit of a girl.

The waitress with the blue eyes waited enthusiastically until her order for the waffles had been filled by the cook. They were perfect specimens of culinary art and she proudly delivered them to the young express driver. A moment later she left the counter with a perfectly cut and steaming piece of blackberry pie. Every spot of the crust remained intact without the slightest depression of any kind. All of the juice and filling had been artistically saved.

The express driver looked down at the pretty morsel before him and smiled.

"What a mean pie you cut," he said and looked up into a pair of happy blue eyes. "Say, I bet you'd make a fine little girl in a fine little home somewhere, wouldn't you?"

The blue-eyed waitress smiled again, one of her finest smiles. He did not know how happy she was.

"And how about tonight?" he said. "Shall I call for you tonight? Harold Lloyd is playing at the Standard tonight."

The blue-eyed waitress accepted the invitation as he attacked the delicious pie.

Plenty of Experience

A burly man sauntered into the premises of a film producing company and managed to reach the managing director's office without being accosted.

He told the director he wished to obtain an engagement with the company. As the applicant looked a most unlikely person for such a post, the director asked if he had had any previous experience.

"I get Saturday afternoon off," stated the would-be player, "an' I reckon I might as well spend the time actin' for picters."

"But have you had any experience in moving pictures?" asked the director, who was rather doubtful on the point.

"Have I?" exclaimed the man, and his voice was full of scorn. "I've been vanman to the Shiftum Furniture Removing company for the past five years."

Right, to the Letter

After receiving his first check for work, a young man, desirous of owning a pair of high-top shoes, went to a shoe store and presented the check in payment. The clerk received the approval of the merchant on the check, returned to the young man and told him to "put your John Hancock on it." The youthful buyer indorsed the check and then inscribed, under his name, "John Hancock."

The merchant asked him why he indorsed the check in that manner, and he said he was following the instructions of the clerk. Despite the laughter he left the store proudly with his high-top shoes.

Too True, Alas!

Although the mistress of the house was constantly laying in a supply of food, the larder invariably seemed empty. So she spoke to the cook about it.

"I am sorry to have to mention it, cook," she said, "but don't you think the food disappears rather quickly in the kitchen?"

The cook was very much annoyed.

"Look here, ma'am," she retorted wrathfully, "I may eat 'earty like, but no one could call me gorgeous!"

Measuring Gold Dust

The bureau of mines says that in the early days in California, when they paid in gold dust, they had a small measure about 3 inches long and 1 inch wide and about ¼ of an inch high, which they called a scoop. Gold dust was paid by the scoop and it would vary with the individual gold camps, as the gold dust in some camps was finer than in others.

Affection of Nerves

Ticklishness depends upon the sensitiveness of the nervous system. Susceptibility to tickling is also partially under the control of the will. If no restraint is exercised hypersensitiveness is apt to result. Considerable resistance can be developed.

Taunt of Cowardice Too Much for "Tough"

There is a dentist at One Hundred and Sixty-third street and Third avenue, the Bronx, who is a strong believer in psychology and he calls upon Henry M. Schiller, equity clerk of the Bronx, to back up his latest demonstration of faith in that science. The other day there appeared at his office for treatment an inmate of the Brofix county jail. The patient had complained for several days about a painful tooth and Sheriff Lester Patterson finally ordered him taken to the dentist.

The prisoner was a real, bold hold-up man who had used a gun fearlessly in carrying out his crimes. He showed the average human trait of weakness in the dental chair, however, when the doctor appeared with the forceps, and demanded gas. He was a drug addict and the dentist, after administering twice the normal dose of gas without putting the patient into a coma, started to use the forceps.

The prisoner howled and refused to let the dentist near him. Several attempts brought the same antics from the man in the chair. Finally the doctor winked to the keeper and Equity Clerk Schiffer and the pair left the room. In a few moments all was quiet and the prisoner walked out gazing intently at a big molar in the palm of his hand. Schiffer's query brought the explanation from the dentist.

"The old psychology did it," said the doctor. "I told him you two had sneered and that one of you said he was a brave guy with a gun in his hand, and a helpless holdup victim in front of the gun, but when he was unarmed he was a coward and whimpered like a baby. That turned the trick. 'I'll show them,' he said and he gripped the arms of the chair and in a moment the job was over."—New York Evening World.

"I didn't care whether I lived or died, I felt so badly," said Mr. Rikert, "when I began taking Tanlac. My strength had vanished, sapped by the 'Flu.' My arms and legs were so weak that they were almost useless. I couldn't even turn over in bed without help, so completely undermined was my strength and vitality.

NOW "STEP-INS" FOR MEN

Filmy Underwear Like Women's Now Follows the Decorative Drawers Made Popular for Men Pacific Coast Started It; The East Is Taking It Up

To the old fashioned individual still retaining faith in red flannel as the correct underwear for the well dressed man, fancy shorts came as a shock. Drawers decorated with stripes and figures, robin's egg blue drawers and peach creations upset the best traditions that demanded of he-men the wearing of sturdy virile garments. Gossamer silks were for women. Now we have step-ins for men and these no doubt will start a pale with those who were shocked at the decorated shorts and pastel tinted silk drawers that are the vogue with those who are alert to style.

Steps-in or men were introduced to men's wear merchants on the Pacific Coast last September and now merchants are featuring them in New York. Gardiner's of Redwood City have made a window display of this garment, daring the whistles and falsetto comics of critics seeking something to be funny about, and the most surprising fact of all is that step-ins are selling, according to the reports of merchants carrying them. They are selling to men whose physical proportions are such as to make advisable the use of the telephone when any "kidding" about their purchase is practiced. Big, strong men are buying underwear that might be very accurately described as lingerie.

The new step-ins for men, while providing something for the funny man to laugh about, have a practicability and are finding a place in the esteem of men whose sense of humor has not been developed to a point where they can conceive of a light-weight, easily donned garment of absorbent texture as something to laugh about for summer wear.

The step-ins are made in white, and shades of peach, maize, orchid, pink and nile green. They retail at $2.50 upward, made of Rayon Silk.
